

WHY DO YOU CHOOSE OPEN?

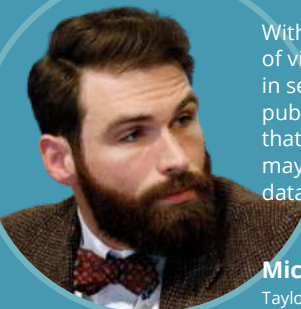

“ This [Open Select] journal, I think, is very well positioned to disseminate new mathematical algorithms and new mathematical methods through the good audience.

”
Martin Kreuzer
Taylor & Francis Author

“ I would say that in academia, there are so many papers being published regularly on cycling, planning and mobility, that if it's not open access, that may be a barrier to finding readers.

”
Patrick Rératdt
Taylor & Francis Author

“ With OA you benefit from a higher level of views in the beginning to stay visible in search rankings. If you're not publishing open access, there's a friction that lowers downloads and ultimately may filter you out of results in databases like Google Scholar.

”
Michael Bossetta
Taylor & Francis Author

“ You want your paper to be read by as many as possible. I still choose exactly which journal suits my work. Basically, it's the same thing as publishing behind a paywall, but you get more readers.

”
Johnny Långstedt
Taylor & Francis Author

“ We need this open climate to have a discussion about global issues. And if we have a discussion about global issues without including people in certain parts of the world, is that really open? Is that really justice? I think not.

”
Elisie Kåresdotter
Taylor & Francis Author

“ By publishing open access your article is almost guaranteed to have a wider reach. Additionally, it's more likely to be picked up and engaged with by people out of your own specific sub-field (and beyond academia).

”
Tyler Rainford
Taylor & Francis Author

“ Everyone can go to the journals website and read the full article. And then if somebody else decides to tweet about it, it has a life of its own on Twitter. Everyone who comes across it can read the full article and it does invite invitations from media.

”
Ruud Gerards
Taylor & Francis Author

